First edition. Upper corner of title page repaired, not affecting text. These two speeches were delivered by Lockwood on the occasion of the trial of Peter Metcalf, a drayman accused of stealing properties from the home of Felix Argenti, before the Vigilance Committee. Metcalf was unjustly accused; two searches of his premises failed to reveal the supposedly stolen goods, and eventually, via a change of venue to Santa Clara, he was acquitted. Lockwood's speeches were directed less at defending Metcalf than at attacking the Vigilance Committee, an act requiring an excess of courage under the circumstances. It is doubtful if the thinking of the people of any other state has ever been so impressed and influenced by a single publication as was that of South Carolina by this work. It is often said, incorrectly, that in it Turnbull originated the doctrine of nullification in its South Carolina form, but it cannot be denied that it was the first bugle-call to rally the South, and it prepared the ground admirable for the seed others were soon to sow. Lada-Mocarski 55: "One of the most important voyages for the history and the cartography of the northwest coast in general and of Alaska in particular." Majors p.805: "The culminating achievement in Northwest Coast exploration, and indeed one of the greatest feats of exploration of all time, was the survey made by Commander George Vancouver during 1792-94. This outstanding expedition surveyed and charted the entire Northwest Coast from San Diego to Kodiak Island in painstaking detail, and the coastline as laid down in the Vancouver atlas of 1798 has essentially the same outline it does today. Vancouver's survey was by far the finest and most important voyage ever made to the Northwest Coast during the period 1542-1841. In terms of specified achievement, the voyage charted the lower Columbia River; it charted Puget Sound and Hood Canal in all their labyrinth of detail; it made the first circumnavigation of Vancouver Island; it made the second visit by foreigners to California and published the first pictures of that region; it performed the first accurate and comprehensive survey of the Northwest Coast and the Hawaiian Islands; and it destroyed forever the myth of a practical Northwest Passage. When Vancouver returned to England in 1795 one of the last great unknown coastlines of the world had been charted in its entirety." Phillips, Alaksan Maps p.29-30. Wagner, Cartography of the Northwest Coast p.853. Wickersham 6601. Zamorano 77. This French edition is more rare than the first edition which was published in London a year before this edition [the latest copy of the English edition on the market was priced by Quaritch at $11,000.] A glance at Vancouver's monumental charts is enough to show not only the detail of his work, but also the improvements which he effected in the map of this American coast. Typical of his care and accuracy, on the chart for Dusky Bay where Cook had inscribed "Nobody knows what" Vancouver substituted a correct coastline and added the legend "Somebody knows what." The narrative describes the many diplomatic ceremonies of the British with the Indians they encountered, many of whom had never before seen white men. 4250.00

They were written to protest against the passage of the Alien and Sedition Acts by the Federalist administration, but the problems considered were much wider in scope, having to do with the nature of the Federal Union. Later, the resolutions were used to buttress the doctrines of states' rights as promulgated particularly in the South. 125.00

FOURTH EDITION

of Henry R. Wagner's and Charles L. Camp's

The Plains & the Rockies

A Bibliography of Narratives of Exploration
Travel and Adventure, 1800-1865

by Robert H. Becker

SINCE its first publication by John Howell—Books in San Francisco in 1921, Henry R. Wagner's The Plains and the Rockies, subsequently expanded in two editions—1937 and 1953—by Charles L. Camp, has been the major authority to guide scholars, librarians, collectors, and booksellers through the bibliographic intricacies of Western Americana. The “Wagner-Camp” has come to be acknowledged as the standard reference work in the field.

At the time of his death Professor Camp had intended to publish a revision of The Plains and the Rockies and was engaged in discussions with the publisher Warren R. Howell regarding this project. An appropriate successor to Professor Camp has been found in the person of the eminent historian and bibliographer, Robert H. Becker. Mr. Becker was formerly the Associate Director of the Bancroft Library, University of California, Berkeley. He has edited Thomas Christy's Road Across the Plains and is the author of Diseños of California Ranchos and other works of historical interest pertaining to Western America and California. Mr. Becker's exhaustive research has brought to light many items previously overlooked and important information to supplement the pre-existing entries. In addition, this fourth edition of The Plains and the Rockies, the most complete and authoritative work of its kind, will contain thirty-two illustrations of books and their title-pages.

The significance of this new edition lies in its thorough bibliographic treatment of each known issue and edition of each title, giving line-by-line transcriptions of every page and every map, full collations, references and confirmed locations of copies, together with brief editorial comments, and an index of authors, titles, and subjects. Now, more than ever, one can consult this revised edition with confidence and find an answer to most Western Americana queries. The book is designed by Andrew Hoyem and printed at the Arion Press of San Francisco and is a superlative example of fine-press printing as well as an indispensable reference work. The volume is approximately 800 pages, with a full index and 32 illustrations, printed by letterpress in Monotype Baskerville on paper of archival quality, in a full cloth binding. $150.00
